

SELF-BELIEF

(Text 1)

There are a few things you just can't learn from a textbook. That you have to live through, to see, to be fully entrenched in.

Because here is a simple truth: This world is a tough place. Getting what you want, making the most of the time you have, requires that you put yourself in the position to succeed.

It means you see a finish line before One exists.

Look, no one is ever going to call you and tell you how incredible your idea is.

You can't build a business on potential or win a championship on promise. Results are binary.

You either accomplish something, or you simply did not. That's it.

That's what people see, the result. So that means every second, every step of the way from where you are right now, until you cross the finish line depends on you, and your thoughts.

How you internalize failure, how you look at setbacks when no one is around to pat you on the back or tell you how great you are. Will you have enough self belief to move forward?

Because my friends, that's the hardest part. That's what no one talks about. Having the courage to wake up every single day of your life, and know that you are building toward something incredible.

You are creating a masterpiece from the ground up, and that means, that when you're looking in the mirror you believe in what's staring back at you.
